After Warrior Villagers no Longer Exist, The Friendly yet Powerful Human Race Has Been Dominated on Planet Earth and Yet There Absorbed the Warrior Villagers and Both of Warrior Villagers and The Defenders when Merged and Reverted back into Previous yet Currently period of Human Species. There likely Mads back to the Year of 1972 but It went Something went Wrong Likely Those Flags ruled by Different Species are Various Alien Race who colonized Planet Earth, so Humans Invented Time Machine and Parallel Universe, There Humans Return to The Actual Universe and Two Universes are both Existed,

The Purbochal Sultanate was a late medieval and early modern sultanate based in the Malay archipelago between the 17th and 19th century. In the aftermath of the fall of the Bengal Sultanate, the Purbochal Sultanate was founded by the unification of Bengali trading outposts and colonies in Southeast Asia before soon becoming the dominant power in the region.

8 Dyson Space and exo-civilizations

Chapter summary

1. "Dyson Space" is the name commonly used to indicate a roughly 30,000 lightyear-long (possibly more) and 5,000 lightyear-wide expanse within the Milky Way, cutting the galactic plane from one side to the other. Formerly known as "The Gap", this region can be seen with optical telescopes as an area significantly more devoid of stars than its surroundings. Covering part of the Sagittarius arm, it is hypothesized to be home to an advanced interstellar civilization. .

2. Natural causes for the drop in luminosity of the region were increasingly questioned starting in the 1960s; in these years infrared telescopes began to show discrepancies between the number of local objects emitting visible light and radio waves and those emitting infrared radiation.

3. Physicist and mathematician Freeman Dyson, after whom Dyson Space is named, first hypothesized in 1968 that the discrepancy was consistent with an alien civilization colonizing and exploiting stellar systems in its area of the galaxy by means of Dyson spheres. This theoretical megastructure, blocking all light from its star for energy collection purposes while radiating excess heat, was also named after Dyson after he hypothesized it in 1960.

4. The Dyson hypothesis has become consensus in the last decade. Improved parallax measurements by the Gaia telescope have proved that all stars with measurable distance visible in the Gap are either closer than 5,000 or farther than 35,000 lightyears from Earth, while many infrared objects in the area are estimated to fall within these extremes. The "interstellar dust" hypothesis has therefore been discarded as implausible.

5. Current consensus posits that each individual star in Dyson Space has likely been encased in a Dyson sphere (or, most likely, a Dyson bubble) for the purpose of entirely collecting its energy. This would indicate the existence of an exo-civilization on the way towards becoming a Kardashev-III type civilization, whose rough borders we can identify. As the Sagittarius arm seems less rich in stars than the Perseus and Scutum-Centaurus arms, it is unclear why this civilization has preferred expanding along the arm rather than in other directions.

6. The closest reaches of the Dyson Space civilization appear to be 5,000 lightyears away from Earth, but the real-time frontier is likely closer. Given the distances involved, no artificial signals from the area have yet been detected. No other information about the civilization is available, including whether it still exists and if it is expanding. Assuming steady expansion at slower-than-light but relativistic speeds, first contact might already happen in the next few thousand years.

Fig. 8.1 Artistic reconstruction of the Milky Way with Dyson Space highlighted. Stars in Dyson Space are shown and not obscured so as to provide a representation of their possible distribution. The arms' structure outside of Earth's neighbourhood, both within and outside Dyson Space, is indicative and still subject to debate.

Official statistics from the administration are most likely fake, although US intelligence states that Khaunialand has an economy of around 1 trillion dollars, showing rapid growth, despite the terrain given to the aliens. It is probable they terraformed the area they were given.
(Low Taper Fade)
The Wall
(Off-Limits for Humans)
Khaunialand is considered to be the most isolated state on Earth, there being a wall set up in their waters to avoid outsiders trespassing. In 1925, The Humans accepted the alien proposal of giving them land instead of just being slaves, choosing a piece of Africa deemed unprofitable, in order to not lose anything of too great value.
At first, the European powers evacuated the area with mass resistance, but the aliens were pleased with what they were given. In the year 2000, with a new dawn, the Low Taper Fade district was open for humans.

Homo neanderthalensis (commonly known as Neanderthals)
Average height: 162 cm
Average brain size: 1600 cubic centimeters
Extra: Neanderthals are heavily built and more muscular than modern humans. They are well adapted to the european cold climate. Thanks to their strength, great intellect and ability to endure cold climate, they now own the greatest portion of the planet's land.
Homo heidelbergensis
Average height: 185 cm
Average brain size: 1250 cubic centimeters
Extra: Large faces, muscular and tall. They are proficient hunters, but they were overrunn by Neanderthals during the Great Wars. Their territory is now the smallest of the four surviving human species.
Homo heidelbergensis
Homo neanderthalensis
Homo erectus
Homo sapiens
Homo sapiens
Average height: 178 cm
Average brain size: 1450 cubic centimeters
Extra: Homo sapiens are probably the most intelligent of all the humans. They were the first to evolve the necessary cognitive characteristics that allowed for the creation of culture and eventually civilization. Their countries are leaders in today's technological progress, and they are probably the most powerful species on the planet.
Homo erectus
Average height: 185 cm
Average brain size: 950 cubic centimeters
Extra: Homo erectus, first species to leave Africa. Being the most widespread species of the genus Homo, homo erectus may have outlived great racial bloodshed from during the Great Wars and afterwards during the Interwar. Their territory is very large and rich in natural resources, so they could develop a very complex society. They do not form part of interspecies relations as the others do.

"Imagine how things might have turned out had the Neanderthals or Denisovans survived alongside Homo sapiens. What kind of cultures, societies and political structures would have emerged in a world where several different human species coexisted? How, for example, would religious faiths have unfolded? Would the book of Genesis have declared that Neanderthals descend from Adam and Eve, would Jesus have died for the sins of the Denisovans, and would the Qur'an have reserved seats in heaven for all righteous humans, whatever the species? Would Neanderthals have been able to serve in the Roman legions, or in the sprawling of bureaucracy of imperial China? Would the American Declaration of Independence hold as a self-evident truth that all members of the genus Homo are created equal? Would Karl Marx have urged workers of all species to unite?

Over the past 10,000 years, Homo Sapiens have grown so accustomed to being the only human species that it's hard to conceive of any other possibility."

The Complex Ethnic Makeup of Atlantis and Surrounding Islands
There are 3-5 groups considered "native" to Atlantis before the arrival of contemporary Europeans: the Ish, Kafurji, Iss, Lomali and Paleo-Atlanteans. All 5 of them share a significant amount of DNA through intermixing over thousands of years, although they all have very different origins.
The Ish and Iss are 2 distinct Neanderthal groups that live in the North and South, respectively. Because they have not intermixed in hundreds of thousands of years, they are very distinct from each other and their languages have baffled linguists the world over. The Paleo-Atlanteans were the first Homo Sapiens to arrive and were of Cro-Magnon stock, intermixing with both groups of Neanderthals and driving them further into the fringes. The Kafurji are believed to be of Paleo-Iberian origin (possibly distantly related to the Basques) and settled mainly in the North, while the Lomali are descended from Guanche sailors from the Canary Islands and settled mainly in the South.
Over thousands of years, the Kafurji and Lomali began to mix with and assimilate the remaining Ish and Iss populations, respectively, to such an extent that outsiders classified them as belonging to the same ethnic groups: the ish/Kafurji (or Villmen) and iss/Lomali (or Gizdnak). Although full-blooded Neanderthal groups do still exist, their numbers have dropped dramatically, going from around 17% of pre-European contact Atlantis, to only 1% today, and most of the Ish and Iss descendants now speak either the Kafurji or Lomali languages. The Paleo-Atlanteans have also greatly decreased in number and it is unknown how long they will continue to be distinct ethnic groups. The Atlantean government has pushed hard for ethnic minorities to assimilate into 1 of the 2 dominant ethnic groups.
